Montpelier would offer no objection to the return of the legislature after Thanksgiving.

One can fully appreciate the beauty of the "beautiful snow" until one wades through it because of necessity. Then let us draw the curtain.

We venture to guess that the dirt is flying just now down on the isthmus of Panama, and will fly until the call of the turkey sounds from the White House.

Considering the nature of its business, perhaps it is only natural that the Burlington Rendering company should wish to "try out" its diseased meat case in supreme court.

The marriage of whiskey and consumption has not yet been solemnized, but their double funeral is of frequent occurrence. Notice the headstones in the cemetery; they tell the story in part.

There are only eight states and territories smaller in area than Vermont. These eight are New Hampshire, Massachusetts, New Jersey, Hawaii, Connecticut, Delaware, Rhode Island and District of Columbia.

Apparently there are a few deer left in Vermont after the annual slaughter this fall, because some farmers in Brattleboro have sent a representative to Montpelier to complain that the animals are nibbling the young trees in their orchards.

BECOMING A DOUBTFUL STATE.

The state of New Hampshire is one of the doubtful commonwealths when it comes to the question of politics, as is shown by the official returns of the election this fall. Democrats are almost in control, and they were so powerful that in the election that they prevented the choice of Charles M. Floyd. That is, to all appearances, the Democrats did this. But a close analysis of the votes would undoubtedly show that not a few Republicans hopped over the fence into the Democratic pasture for the time being. Their votes swelled the total strength of Nathan C. Jameson to 37,642; whereas Floyd, who was expected to win, had only 40,581—just 176 votes short of an election. The prohibition and Socialist votes were slight, the former having 2,212 and the latter but 1,911. But the combined total of the two with the Democratic sufficed to throw the election into the legislature. Next January the assembly will be called up to elect a chief executive.

LOCAL OPTION ENTRENCHED.

The license, local option liquor law of Vermont is standing the test of the present legislature admirably. There is no disposition to change the instrument in any of its essential features; on the contrary, there is a spirit to strengthen the law in every way possible, making it more enforceable. Four years of trial have not diminished the faith of those who brought forward the idea that local option is the best method of dealing with the problem of liquor selling. They have also won many converts to the principle which says that each town is better able to dictate, and therefore enforce, that system which is best adapted to its peculiar conditions. It took the state of Vermont something like fifty years to come to this conclusion, in which half century there existed, in some localities, conditions rotten to the very core. In spite of that rottenness, Vermont was loath to make the change. But now that the change has been made, it will take much more than has yet appeared to shake the faith in the new system. The Vermont mind has been made up, which means that it is made up for a considerable period. Therefore the efforts which are now directed to repair the worn places of the license law will be welcomed in the spirit in which they are advanced. If possible, let us make the instrument even stronger than it is.

CURRENT COMMENT.

The various reforms advocated by Governor Proctor on the stump and recommended in his message are being carried out by the legislature in a gratifying manner.—Burlington Free Press.

It would suit us far better if there was no open season on deer. They are more attractive alive than dead. We hope the legislature will shorten rather than lengthen the open season.—Groton Times.

Mr. McCall of Massachusetts is not loved by some eminent gentlemen at Washington, but he seems to be as "solid" as ever with his constituents. Pres. Eliot has said that in the House Mr. McCall supplies, as far as one man can do it, the lack of a healthy and vigilant political opposition. Sometimes in the execution of this task Mr. McCall emulates the activities of the painful but useful "thorn in the side" spoken of by St. Paul the Apostle.—Hartford Courant.

It is a little difficult to understand how Representative Fletcher of Cavendish was able to show that the raising of the tax limit on savings bank deposits from $1,500 to $2,000 had increased the deposits in Vermont ten million dollars. The prosperity of Vermont along with the rest of the country must have had something to do with this increase. The proposed measure exempting all savings banks deposits from taxation is in effect an inducement for a man of means to put his money into a savings bank instead of investing it in business enterprises, and thus allowing the farmer, the manufacturer, the merchant and other enterprises to pay practically all the local taxation. Many believe that the measure ought not to become a law until an amendment is added requiring savings banks to loan all their money in the state or pay a local tax on all money loaned outside the state. The News is inclined to believe that some such requirement would in the end be beneficial, provided the tax limit is removed from deposits.—Northfield News.

IMPORTANT ARREST
IN 1905 FAILURE

Francis E. Marrin Declared It Was All Off, When He Was Arrested in Buffalo Last Night.

Buffalo, N. Y., Nov. 17.—Francis E. Marrin, one of the principal figures in the Storey Cotton company failure in Philadelphia in 1905, was arrested here last night in the lobby of the Genesee hotel. Marrin disappeared from Philadelphia on March 17, 1905, when the postoffice department raided the Storey Cotton company and since then he has been in Europe. He came back to America but a few weeks ago, and the vigil the postoffice authorities have kept for nearly two years ended last night with his arrest.

Marrin arrived in Buffalo three days ago. He registered at the Genesee under the name James Johnstone. W. J. Hickory, chief postoffice inspector at Washington, had been tracing Marrin's movements since his return to the United States and yesterday Postoffice Inspector Cortelyou, who has charge of the Philadelphia district, came to Buffalo to get his man.

"I'm all off," was Marrin's only comment when the officers located him and placed him under arrest. Later he consented to waive extradition; did not want an attorney and said he wanted to get back to Philadelphia as soon as the inspector could take him there.

Since 1905, he said, he had been in Europe. While there he was mixed up in several automobile accidents, which incidentally the postoffice authorities had been heard about. He visited London, Paris, Berlin, Brussels and Amsterdam. On Marrin's person were check books on London and Paris banks. Marrin has a wife and two children in New York. He will be arraigned before United States Commissioner Keating today and probably will be at once taken to Philadelphia. He spent the night at police headquarters.
